Long ago, there lived a monster in a tiny village. The villagers were terrified of it and felt their hamlet was cursed to have such a creature living in their midst. Several men tried to fight the monster. One man attacked it with a sword, but the creature grabbed the weapon, almost magically pulled out another sword - twice as large, twice as sharp - and cut the man in half. Another time, a villager set off with a huge wooden club to clobber the monster. The monster responded by slamming the man with a wooden club twice as heavy as the one he had brought along. On another occasion, a villager tried to set the monster on fire. But the monster merely opened its mouth to swallow the fire and, in return, spewed leaping flames that roasted the poor man.

Scared by these incidents, the village folk gave up trying to fight the monster. They began to believe that this was their lot and they would have to learn to live with it. Then, one day, a little boy said he would go and vanquish the monster. The people were surprised, but despite their skepticism, went along to see the little boy take on the monster.

As the boy looked up at the giant, the monster just flared its nostrils and glared back. The people were frightened. The little boy took out an apple and offered it to the monster. The monster grabbed it, popped it into its mouth, and then thrust its clenched fist in front of the boy. Bam! As the fist slowly opened, the people were astonished to see that it held two delicious apples. Twice as red and twice as large as the apple the boy had offered.

The boy then took out a little earthen pot with some water and gave it to the monster. It took that and responded by placing in front of the boy two urns made of gold, filled with delicious juice. The people were ecstatic. They suddenly realized that the monster was not a curse but a boon to the village. The little boy smiled. And the giant just smiled back.

इस संसार में धन ही सब कुछ नहीं है। धन की पूजा तो बहुत कम जगहों में होती देखी गई है। संसार का इतिहास उठा कर देखिए और उदाहरण ढूँढ़- ढूँढ़कर सामने रखिए, तो आपको विदित हो जाएगा कि जिनकी उपासना करते हैं, जिनके लिए हम आंखें बिछाने तक को तैयार रहते हैं, जिनकी स्मृति तरोजा रखने के

लिए हम अनेक तरह के स्मारक चिन्ह बनाकर खड़े करते हैं, उन्होंने रुपया कमाने में अपना समय नहीं बताया था, बल्कि उन्होंने कुछ ऐसे काम किए थे जिनकी महत्ता हम रुपए से अधिक मूल्यवान समझते हैं। जिन लोगों के जीवन का उद्देश्य केवल रुपए बटोरना है, उनकी प्रतिष्ठा कम हुई है। अधिकांश अवस्थाओं ने उन्हें किसी ने पूछा तक नहीं। उन्होंने जन्म लिया, रुपया कमाया और परलोक की यात्रा की। किसी ने जाना तक नहीं कि वे कौन थे और कहां गए। मानव समाज स्वार्थी अवश्य है, पर वह स्वार्थ की उपासना करना नहीं जानता। अंत में वे ही पूजे जाते हैं, जिन्होंने अपने जीवन को अर्पित करते समय सच्चे मनुष्यत्व का परिचय दिया है।

Too often, says Professor Uccelli, students learn about language in isolation, memorising vocabulary in one lesson and studying grammar and sentence structure in another. Of course, students need to understand technical terms — ‘isotope’ in a chemistry textbook, ‘colonise’ in a history article — but this knowledge is insufficient if students don’t understand how pieces of language relate to each other to create meaning.

Elsewhere, Uccelli showcases the difficulties that academic texts can pose for students by quoting from a passage:

The scientific agreement today is that Earth’s surface temperatures have increased in recent decades. Moreover, most scientists agree that it is extremely likely that humans are causing this problem through activities that increase concentrations of greenhouse gases.

To understand the text, students have to know the definitions of ‘greenhouse gases’ and ‘concentrations’. But those clarifications won’t elucidate the whole passage: Students also need to understand that ‘this problem’ refers to increasing surface temperatures, and that ‘moreover’ signifies that the second sentence builds on the first.

Knowing how to unlock these connecting concepts is particularly important when reading academic texts, which use language far differently than we use it as speakers. When we talk through complicated subjects, we can use simple sentence structures, aided by tools such as hand movements, intonation and enactment. But, when there are only words on a page to explain these ideas precisely and concisely, the language structures often get complex and students can grow confused when faced with these dense constructions. Paradoxically, the academic language features meant to support precise communication can obstruct comprehension if readers are unfamiliar with them.
