Question ID : 9717422121
Chosen Option : 4Comprehension:

Read the given passage and answer the following questions.

Alternative medicine has become much more popular in the West in recent years. It seems that people are becoming increasingly worried about the side effects of drugs, and are turning to treatments such as homeopathy, yoga, reflexology and acupuncture to complement, or sometimes even replace, Western medicine. An event in my life three or four years ago, made me examine my own attitudes towards alternative medicine. After suffering from insomnia for a few months, I was feeling mentally and physically exhausted. My friend Tony suggested that I visit an acupuncturist. Since I have a healthy fear of needles from waiting in line for vaccinations in gloomy school corridors, I was reluctant to take his advice, but by this time I was so tired that I was prepared to try almost anything. I made an appointment with the only acupuncturist in my area, and went to his alternative health centre the following morning. After taking my pulse, looking at my tongue and asking a few questions about my diet and lifestyle, the acupuncturist correctly deduced that I was worn out. (I found this extremely impressive since he hadn't asked me why I had come to see him.) He then inserted a needle in my right foot between my first and second toe and, despite my anxiety, I fell asleep immediately. At the time I considered the whole experience to be close to a miracle. Acupuncture is based on the idea that energy flows through the human body along 12 lines or meridians. These meridians end up at organs in the body, and illness is the result of a blockage of the energy flow to these organs. To remove the blockage, an acupuncturist inserts very fine needles into the body at points along the meridians. This stimulates the flow of energy and restores the patient's health. In the West, the treatment is often used to relieve headaches, dental pain, back pain and arthritis, and to treat depression, asthma, high blood pressure and anxiety. Since acupuncture is known to be effective against pain, it is not surprising that many sportspeople have experimented with acupuncture when fighting injury. Finally, if you do decide to visit an acupuncturist, it is important that you check that they are qualified and registered to practise acupuncture. In the past, some people have experienced allergic reactions, broken needles and even punctured lungs while being treated, although this is very uncommon.
