Once, a cat and a mouse were very good friends and happily lived together in the same house. As winter was approaching, they decided to stock some food items. So they went to the market and bought a big pot of cheese.

Fearing that other cats and mice might steal their cheese, they hid it carefully behind the altar in the church.

The cat was very greedy. After a few days, he had a great yearning to taste the cheese. He went to the mouse and told him that he was invited to baptize his cousin's child in the church. The mouse believed him and the cat set out for his first steal.

He ate a large chunk of the cheese and returned home happily. When the mouse asked him what the child was named the cat replied, "Top-off." The mouse was surprised at the name.

After a few days, the greedy cat wanted to have some cheese again and told the mouse that he had to baptize another child and rushed to the church. He finished half the cheese and told the mouse that this time the child was named "Half-gone."

After a few days, the cat made the same excuse and went again and finished the remaining cheese. This time he told the mouse that the child was named "All-gone." The mouse was puzzled by the cat's behaviour but did not say anything.

When winter came, the mouse went to the church to get the cheese but found that it had vanished. At last, he understood the trick played by the greedy cat.

During the first lockdown last year, one of my __(A)__ created a WhatsApp group. They had a __(B)__: every day we send a photo. The catch? It had to be positive. I was grateful, very __(C)__, for that chat. We soon failed to send a photo daily, but frequently something would appear, and I would receive an __(D)__ into my friend's world. It was a reassurance. Before I had even clicked on the latest photo I would find myself __(E)__ — here was a friend, thinking of the rest of us. There was something in that alone. The pandemic has encouraged reflection. We have turned inwards: stuck inside, and in our heads. With forced __(F)__, for some it has been a time to take stock. All the while, friends have been kept at a distance. How to be social when seeing your friends in-person is discouraged (sometimes, illegal)? How have friendships __(G)__ during the pandemic?
