A primitive seabird that prospered about 85 million years ago along the warm, shallow inland sea that once split North America boasted what scientists are calling a surprising blend of traits from its dinosaur ancestors and modern avian characteristics. Four new fossils of Ichthyornis, which had both a beak and teeth and lived a lifestyle like modern gulls, offer striking evidence of this Cretaceous Period bird's important position in

Teachingninja.in avian evolutionary history, researchers said on May 2. While Ichthyornis fossils were first unearthed in the 1870s, the new ones from Kansas and Alabama chalk deposits, including a beautifully preserved skull, reveal far more about it than previously known.

Birds evolved from small feathered dinosaurs. Unlike the earliest-known birds like Archaeopteryx, which lived 150 million years ago, Ichthyornis was a strong flier, its body streamlined, simplified and adapted for the flight like modern birds, Yale University paleontologist Bhart-Anjan Bhullar said. Its primitive characteristics were largely in its skull. “Despite the modernity of its body and wings, it retained almost a full complement of dinosaurian teeth, and it had a strong bite with large, dinosaurian jaw muscles. However, it perceived its world and thought like a bird, with a bird's enormous eyes and expanded modern-looking brain”, Bhullar added.

While older primitive birds like Confuciusornis, from 125 million years ago, sported a beak, the small one on Ichthyornis was the first known to have modern attributes like a 'pincer tip' for grasping, pecking and fine manipulation. “Its sharp teeth probably would have assisted in holding onto slippery marine prey, while the incipient beak at the tips of its jaws probably would have allowed it to manipulate objects with fine dexterity such as modern birds can do, and preen its feathers”, University of Bath paleontologist Daniel Field said. Ichthyornis was the size of a tern, with a two-foot wingspan, and probably ate fish and shellfish. It shared the skies with flying reptiles called pterosaurs when dinosaurs dominated the land. Toothed birds vanished along with the dinosaurs and many other species after an asteroid impact 66 million years ago. Fossils like those of Ichthyornis and Cretaceous toothed diving bird Hesperornis were cited by 19th-century naturalist Charles Darwin as strong support for his theory of evolution. “Ichthyornis shows the ways in which evolution is both complex and elegant, permissive of individual changes and massive integrated transformations,” Bhullar said.

Correct Option - 5

Que. 76 Directions: Study the information carefully and answer the given questions.

* means the first subject is to the left of the second subject.
/means the first subject is to the right of the second subject.
%means the first subject and the second subject are neighbours of each other.
^ means the first subject and the second subject are not the neighbours of each other.

means number of persons sitting between first subject and second subject.

For example, A2#R means, two persons are sitting between A and R.

Digit denotes number of places between the given two subjects in that manner.
For example, P2*R means, P is second to the left of R.

Eight people A_1, A_2, A_3, A_4, A_5, A_6, A_7, $A_8$are sitting around a circular table but not necessarily in the same order and all are facing inside the circle.

Further it is given that:

$A_5$2*A_7, A_7 3#A_4, A_1^A_4, A_6^A_5, $A_3$3*A_6, A_5^A_2.
If A_8*A_5, A_3*A_7 is true then X*A_4. What is X here.

1. A_1
2. A_6
3. A_8
4. A_2
5. All of the above.
